

There are some phrases that I thought of when converting from a for loop to a while loop and vice versa. "Before I see you" (for loop, initialization statement, condition expression, and update expression) and "I will see you" (initialization statement, while loop, condition expression, update expression) these two phrase can make it easy to remember what goes where in each loop and how I can switch from one loop to another. So if I wanted to go from a for loop to a while loop remembering the two phrases I know that I have to put the initialization statement ("I") before the while loop("will") then the condition expression("see") and then the update expression("you") in the body of the loop. If I were to go from a while to a for loop I know that I must put for("before") then initialization statement ("I") followed by the condition expression("see") and then the update expression ("you").